

Please do not relax the decency standards! They are seemingly the last limit-setting process we have on media. What possible rationale could there be for this? If the FCC has dismissed so many “stale” cases, then it stands to reason that many folks would like a tighter standard, not a lower one. Please, the line between “art” and pornography is already hopelessly blurred. Children are exposed to so many images that objectify the human body already. Where does “right” end and “wrong” start? How can our children possibly figure this out if we do not have some societal barriers in place? Please do not confuse them anymore by lowering the standards on this.
